President's Message

Time is growing short before the 63rd VNA Convention, Coin and Collectibles show in Fredericksburg in late September. The VNA Officers and Board are working hard to make this convention safe and memorable. There will be exhibits, a full house of dealers (100+) with 150 tables. We seek your ads in the convention program to offset the cost of the printing.

Steve Ellsworth, the immediate past president of the ANA, and past officer of the VNA will speak at the Saturday night banquet on September 24th on "Security" which I think is pertinent. We will host local home schoolers and accompanying adults on Friday, so there should be many young people at the show which is what the hobby desperately needs. Saturday will be Grandparents / Parents Day with educational lectures for all. VNA membership applications will be available, as will raffle tickets, kids' tables, and more. All current, paid-up VNA members can get into the show an hour early before the public, at 9:00 AM Friday to Sunday; this is one of the perks of being a VNA member.

We are still looking for volunteers to help at the reception desk, for security, to help the dealers get to their tables in an orderly fashion, and to help with breakdown after the show finishes on Sunday afternoon. We need help with individuals setting up educational exhibits and monitoring the exhibits. Hotels around the convention center have not been cooperating as in the past, and for this reason, no set aside group of rooms at reduced rates are available.

It is always sad to report the passing of fellow members. The VNA lost a key member Billy Hoover several months ago. He assisted Jack Hepler with the exhibits and then took over those duties after Jack's death. He and Moore "Surly Surely" Gouldman have done an excellent job with the exhibits. He will be sorely missed. VNA elections are coming up with vacancies including VNA Secretary and several on the Board of Directors.

I hope all have a fantastic and safe convention and I hope to speak with you. Be careful and safe and keep a good eye on your surroundings. Thanks.

Parry Bragg - VNA President

The Peoples' Choice Award for best exhibit at the VNA Convention is renamed this year in honor of Billy Hoover to become:

The Billy Hoover - Peoples' Choice Award.

New Authors and Articles - We welcome original numismatic articles with accompanying coin photos for publication in The Virginia Numismatist.

Tell us about coins, currency, or tokens you collect, study, inherit, find, or buy/sell, and share your stories of hobby triumphs, achievements, pitfalls, and hard-won wisdom with others. Stories with ties to coin collecting in Virginia will be given preference. Please contact the editor.

VNA 2022 Convention Banquet - The VNA banquet this year will be held at a private room at the "Great American Buffet" at 1780 Carl D. Silver Parkway, in front of the Walmart in Central Park, starting at 6:00 PM on Saturday, September 24th. Pay $15.99 at the door. Reservations are under "Coin Club."

Coin Television – David Lisot has posted more than five-hundred videos for coin collectors with footage of numismatic shows, events, lectures, and gatherings from around the country. He documents the U.S. coin collecting market, its people, and interviews personalities in the numismatic field. Walk the floor at the FUN Show in Florida. See lectures at the recent PAN Show in Pennsylvania. See coin treasures at the Long Beach Expo in California. David has captured interviews with legendary collectors since the 1980s who are no longer with us and continues to document the goings-on of the numismatic community. His videos are engaging and free online. See CoinTelevision.com and subscribe on YouTube for the complete play list and notification of new videos.

Email WARNING: VNA President Parry Bragg's email was hacked long ago and imposters are still sending bogus emails and text messages asking for help from VNA members. Please do not buy and send them gift cards. Please do not respond to any false electronic communications from Parry, who much prefers talking in person by telephone.

Early America Change

by Robert Painter

Rapidan River Relic Hunters Association

Whole and cut Spanish/Spanish Colonial silver coins were commonly used in early America. These whole and cut pieces range in value from a dollar down to half of a half dime and were found in Virginia with the help of metal detectors

I bet some of you have seen coins that have been altered by cutting them in half or quarters. Some coin pieces are mere slivers of silver. These cut coins known as “sharp silver” find their genesis in the need to make small change during hard times before the beginnings of the United States of America to well past the end of the Civil War. As our new nation began to organize a government, the Continental Congress recognized the need for our own hard currency. Under colonial rule, England banned the export of British gold and silver coins, preferring to give their colonies ‘credit,’ which severely limited the amount of English coin supplied to the British colonies. Coinage was always in short supply in Colonial America. As a result, and out of need, some colonies issued paper currency and some defied England and had their own coins produced, but that is a subject unto itself. Both under British rule, and immediately following our revolution, money of choice in Virginia was whatever foreign silver could be obtained with the best being Spanish Colonial milled silver dollars of eight reales, and smaller fractional coins of 4, 2, 1, and $\frac{1}{2}$ reales, because of their trusted quality and weight. In fact, the large eight reales was the forerunner of the American silver dollar. Many of us older folks have heard the old quip, “two-bits, four-bits, six-bits, a dollar.” That saying comes from the fact that one eighth of an eight reales coin was considered a “bit” (worth twelve and a half cents) thus eight bits equaled a dollar. Thomas Jefferson even adopted the Spanish Colonial piece-of-eight as a standard model for America’s new dollar currency.

1739 Spanish Colonial Milled Piece-of-Eight from Mexico City

Our new government did establish main and branch mints, but the mints struggled to produce sufficient numbers of coins to satisfy the needs of a growing America, so Americans continued to make do with what foreign coin was available throughout the first half of the 19th century.

Spanish silver Pistareens, half Pistareens, and “Picayunes” commonly circulated in Virginia during the 18th Century, often being cut to make exact small change

Pistareens generally disappeared from circulation in the early 1800s, replaced by Spanish Colonial reales, which are consistently found with the help of metal detectors in civil war camps and around period home sites, along with a variety of the other types of early U.S. coinage used prior to, and during the Civil War. Many are found with a small hole in them, thought to allow a soldier or traveler to sew the coins together into clothes as an effort to prevent accidentally losing them.

As a result of hard times, bank panics, and wars, persistent coin shortages caused scarce coins to be cut in half, in quarters, and occasionally into very small slivers as a practical way of making change, when smaller denominations were unavailable. No coin was immune from being cut to make change, although very few gold coins have been found altered as such. ‘Think about it’ - you only have a silver coin worth 25 cents and want to purchase goods worth one bit (12 and ½ cents) in a time where no one has much change. Cut the two-bit coin in half and you have correct change in good silver. This scheme also precludes the merchant from handing you four or five large copper cents to lug around should he even have them on hand. As you can tell by the photos, the majority of “cut silver” found in Virginia are thin Spanish pistareens with comparatively few, thicker eight reales cut pieces found. American coins are occasionally found cut, and rarer still are divided tokens and state issued copper coins. As an example, I was lucky enough to buy from a relic hunter a 1773 Virginia half penny that was scored in preparation for halving into farthings, but for some reason the process didn’t take place.

Cut Colonial Coppers and American Cents are not found as often as cut silver coins, although three quarters / half / quarters of a cent were needed to make exact change for bits and half bits

Hopefully, you will at some time be lucky enough to recover a cut coin from the Civil War or before. You should consider the hard, economic circumstances our people were under when that coin was altered. Those altered coins speak out as artifacts of the desperate financial conditions during hard times in America.

25-Cent Sutler Tokens by S. Hatch for the 7th Regiment, Ohio Volunteer Infantry were cut from 'two bits' to 'one bit' each as recovered in a Civil War camp
